

Surviving Holographs or Sources of John Wesley's Letters Wesley Works Editorial Project

The following list comprises all letters written by John Wesley for which there is some known surviving source of their content. Letters in red font were located after the volume in which they would have appeared was already in print. They will be placed in an Addendum in Vol. 31. This list contains hundred of letters not found in earlier published collections.

Conversely, a few items that some earlier published collections of Wesley's letters contain are actually books, pamphlets, or specifically 'public letters' that have been placed in the Works edition in volumes focused on the appropriate subject. Readers are directed to a separate file ('John Wesley Letters Edition List') for any questions about where a letter in another collection might be found in our edition. [This file also sheds light on the earliest publication date for the various holographs; thus, the date at which scholars and others might have been aware of them.]

The list below identifies the current location of sources used in this project for its transcriptions of Wesley's letters.

The holograph (or actual letter sent) is cited whenever available. Some holding locations make these available to view online: particularly Drew, Bridwell Library (SMU), Duke, and Pitts Library (Emory).

Many holographs are in private hands. The WWEP Archive holds digital images, photocopies, or manuscript transcriptions of several of these (noted in the list below), collected over the years, which are used for our transcription.

When the holograph is not extant, priority turns to contemporary sources like draft copies in Wesley's hand, or transcriptions by recipients in letter-books—and the locations of such is cited.

There are many cases where the holograph or a transcription was available to an editor of an earlier published collection but is now lost (or its current holder unknown). In these cases we cite and rely upon the earliest or most complete previous published transcription.

Similarly, when Wesley sent a letter to a newspaper or journal for publication the holograph was typically discarded after printing, so we cite and rely upon the initial published form.
